By FRANK GEORGE
(Checked and Approved by Radio Section U. S. Bureau of Standards)

There are other countries in the world where amateur radio operators are free from restriction in the United States. The only restrictions in effect on ham operators are with regard to wavelength and licensing. This is to prevent interference in the air waves.

The amateur operator is not under any special law. Many amateurs are trained with great accuracy who give excellent service to the public. The "amateur" operator is a hobbyist and is not paid for his services. He is not used strictly to designate operators who are not professionals. The law is not...

The radio operator is one who has been given out for the purpose of "listening in" or anything else are more than 15000 of various persons.

AMATEURS WORK

To the amateur operator is all much of the credit for the new law. The United States is doing a lot of work. The results of the practical development of long distance radio communication has been largely the result of tests and experiments conducted by amateurs in experimenting the efficiency of methods of communication.

Many of the best of the radio operators in the American military and naval services during the war were recruited from the ranks of amateur operators.

The amateurs have also been of considerable assistance to the Department of Commerce with its investigations into the radio laws. They have given the radio operators the opportunity to give their views and suggestions and to help in the development of a radio law which is better than any other.

AID IN EMERGENCIES

The possibility of a radio operator being called upon to help in a disaster is not a remote possibility. It is a fact that the radio operator is one of the most reliable and efficient of all the people in the world. He is not only a person who can be called upon to help in a disaster, but he is also a person who can be called upon to help in a disaster.

Without the help of the radio operator, the world would be a very different place. It is a fact that the radio operator is one of the most reliable and efficient of all the people in the world. He is not only a person who can be called upon to help in a disaster, but he is also a person who can be called upon to help in a disaster.
